Torah is the body of wisdom and law contained in Jewish scholarship, comprising the first five books of the Hebrew Bible. The term is derived from the Hebrew word for instruction, teaching, or study.

Torah study is central to Jewish culture and is viewed as a means of connecting with the past and with God. It is practiced in various ways, including through the study of the Torah scrolls, which are handwritten on parchment and stored in the holiest part of the synagogue in the ark known as the holy ark (aron hakodesh) in Hebrew.

The Torah is divided into three main parts:

- Neviim (Prophets): This section contains the books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Lamentations, and Ezekiel. It includes the prophetic books of the Hebrew Bible.
- Ketuvim (Writings): This section includes the historical books of Ruth, Esther, the five Megillot (Psalms, Proverbs, Job, Song of Songs, Ecclesiastes), and the poetic books of Isaiah and Jeremiah.
- Mikra’ot Gedolot (The Torah): This section contains the five books of Moses: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. It is the most important part of the Torah, and it is studied daily in the practice known as daf yomi (learning one page per day).

The Torah is not understood merely as a book of law, although it does contain legal codes. It is also a narrative, a history, and a collection of teachings and wisdom. The Torah is studied both individually and in the context of communal life, where it is discussed, taught, and applied.

The weekly Torah portion, also known as the parsha, is the section of the Torah that is read and studied each week in the context of the Jewish Sabbath. This portion is chosen from one of the five books of the Torah and is read from the Torah scrolls in the synagogue. The study of the Torah is a continuous process, as new insights and interpretations are continually being developed by rabbis and scholars.
